

The Suar (Suarina) tree is a non-endangered, non-Indigenous, fast-growing hard wood tree found in parts of East and South East Asia. Due to its fast growth the trees near a water source like a lake or river grow the fastest and have straighter and less distinctive grain pattern. If the tree grows further away from a regular water source the growth is more twisted with very intense grain pattern and color and many natural features such as holes and fissures.

The wood from the tree is perfect for the current trend of organic furniture due to the often-wild grain pattern as well as the natural features in the planks.

Teak wood is a dense, close-grained type of hardwood that is sourced from the Tectona grandis tree, native to south and southeast Asia. Growing up to 50 metres and living for 100 years, teak is coveted for its attractive colour and grain, durability, strength, resistance to splitting, cracking, termites, fungus and weathering.

Teak is originally golden in colour and has a smooth grain and texture. It's high in natural oils and rubber, meaning it's strong, durable, and virtually impervious to extreme weather conditions and rotting, even if left untreated.
